

Every student has a different personality type, and thus a different learning style. Being able to identify the learning preference, and selecting the appropriate teaching style guarantees better results.

Tim Landry will deliver this in-service workshop. Tim is a graduate of the University of Maine, spent 10 years as a teacher, and has been in the corporate world for the last twenty-five years. As a corporate trainer, he has specialized in the use of Myers-Briggs and other analytical tools to study how learning is affected by personality type. This workshop is an adaptation of a workshop entitled ‘Flex Speak’ and is designed specifically for teachers.

This is a very interactive workshop and will include the following:

- ❑ His or her own Myers-Briggs personality profile.
- ❑ A thorough understanding of personality types and how children and adults learn differently.
- ❑ A basic understanding of how people like to receive information and make decisions.
- ❑ The techniques that will allow a teacher to flex their teaching style to match the needs of the student.
- ❑ How to measure the effectiveness of your teaching style.

After this workshop you will be able to:

1. Quickly determine the personality preferences of your students.
2. Flex your style for each student without developing a lot of individual programs.
3. Use your skills to improve relationships with students, staff, and friends.
4. Identify the signals that tell if a child is learning.

This workshop will benefit teachers at every level, and is appropriate for both public and private schools.
